Lando Norris won the pole position for the Spanish Grand Prix, with a driver McLaren in first place and a completely exceptional lap after having won the Barcelona football bet. He won the Red Bull of Max Verstappen in second place, Mercedes Lewis Hamilton (in third), while his teammate George Russell finished fourth, placed by Ferrari Charles Leclerc (5th).

With the football bet win in the GP of Miami and the rhythm he demonstrated in chasing Verstappen, he won the Imola football bet, finishing second in the final lap of the Canadian Grand Prix.

McLaren and Norris did very well in the football bet, maintaining focus after a fire started in the engine one hour before the first practice. All were withdrawn from the team base, with only some members being taken to hospital as a precaution.

Although Verstappen has remained in pole in the seven initial meetings, he has now been denied in the last three and this was a clear indication that his advantage in these first sessions was definitively closed. Barcelona is considered a benchmark against which to measure his performance in the football bet cars; McLaren is at the top here, suggesting he really has been taken by the Red Bull to face real challenges with them today! This is the second pole of the career of Norris and the first in the Spanish Grand Prix. He reclaimed his first win in the GP of Russia in 2024, which was the last year when McLaren finished in an important position in the boxes, as he has not reclaimed any since Kimi Raikkonen did so in 2005.

In the fast opening laps of the third trimester, Verstappen established the rhythm with the first lap as a football bet, with a time of 1:11.673, especially fast in the second and third sectors. Norris was only 10th behind while Hamilton and Russell had quickly looked at the start of the race to close only a few hundredths behind McLaren (the team more known is formed by the team).

The last laps were vital, but Verstappen seemed to keep the cards in rhythm. But with the death of Norris he made a powerful lap and attacked all corners to achieve the football bet perfection: his time of 1:11.403 was two hundredths faster than the Dutchman who had been beaten just or square.

Carlos Sainz was sixth for Ferrari, Pierre Gasly and Esteban Ocon were seventh and eighth for Renault, while Piastri was tenth for McLaren.
